Alice Gustafson

I believe academic staff should take advantage of the opportunity to be active members of campus governance. As a member of the Nominating Committee, I would make an effort to attract new participants to the critical committee works that happens at the university. I have been an academic staff member on this campus for 17 years, and for all of that time have worked as an assistant director in University Housing. Our mission within the residence halls is to build strong communities. I believe we can do the same for the larger university community if students, academic staff and faculty all work together.

The Nominating Committee plays an essential role in encouraging academic staff to be a part of our campus community. Thanks.

Ann Groves Lloyd

I'm excited to be a nominee for the ASEC Nominating Committee. I've worked on campus for over 12 years as an affiliate academic staff member at the Wisconsin Alumni Association (an non-profit, independent entity). In July, I became the director of what is now the L&S/Human Ecology Career Services office. Much of the joy of my work on campus has come from the opportunities I've had to work with a wide variety of staff from all corners of this institution. I believe there is tremendous, unrealized opportunities for collaboration and coalition building which service on campus-wide committees can facilitate. As a member of the Nominating Committee, I would encourage my colleagues to get involved in committees outside of their traditional work arena. I also welcome the opportunity to become an active advocate for academic staff, and more familiar with governance issues.

Marchel Hill

I have been on the academic staff since 1984 and have worked in the Institute for Molecular Virology and in three different departments in CALS. Currently, I work in the Biochemistry department as a lab manager and senior research specialist in a molecular virology laboratory.

I am a novice to the academic governance. However, I have served on and directed community programs in the Madison area. I am excited at the chance to be involved in academic staff issues especially for opportunities that will increase the interactions of this diverse group. The members of the Nominating Committee should consist of a cross section of the university community. As a candidate from the life sciences, I would offer a unique and needed voice to represent the specialists who make up the largest sector of academic staff. What I would like to contribute to this committee is a greater involvement by other specialists and related staff in the governance body. I look forward to being part of the assembly process. Thank you for taking the time to read this statement.

Abigail Loomis

I have been the Coordinator for the campus Library Instruction Program since I moved to Madison in 1988. As Coordinator, I have had the good fortune to work with a large number of academic staff from both the campus libraries and student services programs such as the Wisconsin Welcome Planning Group, the International Students' Office, the Learning Technology & Distance Education Division of DoIT, and the Adult Career & Educational Counseling Center. Through my work with these different groups, I have been continually impressed with the range of perspectives, the high level of skills, and the deep level of commitment academic staff bring to campus programs and to the campus community at large.

It has truly been one of the gifts of my job to have the ongoing opportunity to work with such talented, dedicated people. The work of campus committees can be greatly enhanced if academic staff, with their wealth of perspectives, talents, and commitment, are included. My primary goal, if elected to the Nominating Committee, would be to encourage academic staff to showcase their many talents by participating on campus committees.

Char Tortorice

I have been an academic staff member since 1977 and am currently the Associate Director of Testing and Evaluation Services, having served in almost every capacity in that office at one time or another. I have been active in academic staff governance since before it existed and continue to be thrilled when I see how far we have come.

I have served on a number of committees, including ASEC, and if re-elected to the Nominating Committee, it will be my fourth term (with a hiatus of some years in between two 2-year terms).

The strength of any governance system is in the expertise of those serving in leadership roles. We need the best and the brightest representing academic staff on all committees. Age has its privileges and having been around for 23 years, I can honestly say I know the best and the brightest, and meet more every year. It then becomes easy, matching people to the committee assignment that suits them best.
